An Experienced Educator, Strong Voice with New Vision for Seven Oaks

As an educator and proud father of two daughters, I strongly believe that we should invest into quality education from earliest stages of schooling to high school graduation. This includes but not limited to hiring more teachers and support staff, reducing class size, taking advantage of technology, and providing extra-curricular activities to shape their personality.

Schools should provide a learning environment that prepares students to invent the future by developing curiosity, imagination, and resilience. Also, there is dire need to invest more into improving mental health and well-being of students.

COVID pandemic has brought upfront the fact that there should be emphasis on interactive and hands-on elements in learning.
